

Men can't go it alone

FORGET the image of the fancy-free bachelor—men are hopeless at living on their own.

The living standards of more than 140 men and women aged 25 to 44 were compared in a two-year study by Edinburgh University.

Researchers found more men than women suffer money and health problems when left to their own devices.

They are also more likely to feel lonely and to earn lower salaries than their female counterparts.
