

Men living alone lose out to girls

WOMEN fare better at living alone than men, according to a study.

Researchers at the University of Edinburgh found Scots men on their own were more likely than girls to have money and health problems, feel socially isolated and be disadvantaged in the housing market.

The two-year study examined the standard of living of more than 140 25 to 44-year-olds.

